Water for the Camels

THE STORY OF REBEKAH

Genesis 24:10-59

There was once a young girl whose name was Rebekah. Rebekah helped her mother in the home. Near the door of Rebekah's house there stood a tall pitcher or water-jar. All the water Rebekah's family used had to be carried from the well in the tall pitcher.

Every evening Rebekah would lift the jar to her shoulder. Down the street she would go to the well which was just outside the city. Deep, deep into the well she would dip her pitcher until it was full of water. Then once more she would lift the heavy jar to her shoulder and carry it home.

One evening when Rebekah was getting the water at the well she saw some camels coming. She counted. There were ten of them. On some of the camels men were riding. Some had great bundles tied to their backs. The men and the camels looked very dusty and very tired. As Rebekah stood watching one of the men came quickly toward her.

"Will you let me have a little water from your pitcher to drink?" he asked.

"Drink, sir," said Rebekah, smiling, for she had been taught to be polite to strangers.

She quickly lowered her pitcher so the man could have all he wanted.

As he was drinking, Rebekah looked at the tired and thirsty camels.

"I will get some water for your camels, too," she said kindly.

Then she filled her pitcher again and emptied it into a trough that stood near. The thirsty camels crowded around. They stretched out their long necks and drank the water. How good it tasted! Soon it was all gone.

Again Rebekah filled her jar and emptied it for them. Again the camels drank it all. How thirsty they were! Back and forth from the well to the trough went Rebekah with her pitcher until the camels had had all they wanted.

The man was pleased with the girl who was so polite to strangers. He opened his bag and took out a gold ring and two gold bracelets. He gave them to Rebekah. Then he said, "Is there room in your father's house for us to stay tonight?"

"Indeed, yes," said Rebekah. "There is room, and there will be straw and food for your camels, too."

Rebekah ran ahead to tell her family company was coming. As soon as she told the news, her brother started out to meet the strangers. He gave them food and straw for the camels. He took the men into the house. There Rebekah and her mother had supper ready for them.

"I will not eat until I tell you why I have come," said the man who had talked to Rebekah. "I am the servant of your cousin Abraham who lives far away. Abraham has sent me to find a wife for his son Isaac. At the well I met Rebekah, and she was very polite and so kind to me, a stranger. God spoke in my heart and told me she was the one to become Isaac's wife. I pray that you will let her go back with me, to marry Isaac the son of my master."

Everyone looked at Rebekah. "Will you go, Rebekah?" they asked.

"I will go," answered Rebekah.

And the next day Rebekah said good-bye to her mother and her brother, and she rode away to her new home, where she was very happy.

Forget not to show love unto strangers.—Heb. 13: 2.

HOW A QUARREL WAS ENDED

Gen. 27: 41; 28: 5; 31: 17, 18; 32: 13-21; 33: 1-17

There were once two brothers who lived with their father and mother in a tent-home.

The name of one brother was Esau. Esau was a great hunter. He spent much time in the woods and the fields.

The name of the other brother was Jacob. Jacob stayed at home with his father and mother.

One day Jacob did something wrong. While Esau was away hunting, Jacob took something that belonged to his brother.

When Esau came home and learned what Jacob had done he was very angry. He said he would get even with Jacob.

Then Jacob was afraid of his brother. He was so afraid that he ran away from home. He went away off to another country where his Uncle Laban lived. Jacob's uncle gave him the work of looking after the sheep and cows.

Year after year Jacob stayed in this country. He was afraid to go home. He married and had some boys and girls of his own. He had worked so hard that he had many sheep and cows and camels.

But often he thought of his home far away. He thought of his father and mother, and of his brother Esau. He wondered if Esau were still angry with him. Jacob was sorry he had done wrong, but he had never told Esau he was sorry.

At last Jacob grew so homesick that he could stand it no longer. "I am going home," he said. "I will take my family and my camels and my sheep and my cattle and go home."

So Jacob started. Thud, thud, thud, went the feet of the camels and the cows. Patter, patter, patter, went the feet of the sheep and the goats. The dust rose in clouds around them. Jacob was going home.

But he was still afraid of his brother Esau. He decided to send Esau a present. Perhaps Esau would understand then that he was sorry. So Jacob called some of his servants. He sent them on ahead with a very fine present for Esau.

By and by Jacob looked and saw a great company of people coming. When they came closer Jacob saw at the head of the company his brother Esau. With him were four hundred men.

Then Jacob was afraid. "Esau is coming to harm me," he said. "He must still be angry."

But Jacob went bravely out to meet his brother. He knelt on the ground and bowed low before Esau. He wondered if Esau would be very angry.

But Esau, when he saw his brother, came running to meet him. He put his arms around Jacob and kissed him. He had forgiven him long ago.

"What did you mean by sending me such a fine present?" asked Esau as they talked together.

"I wanted to please you," said Jacob.

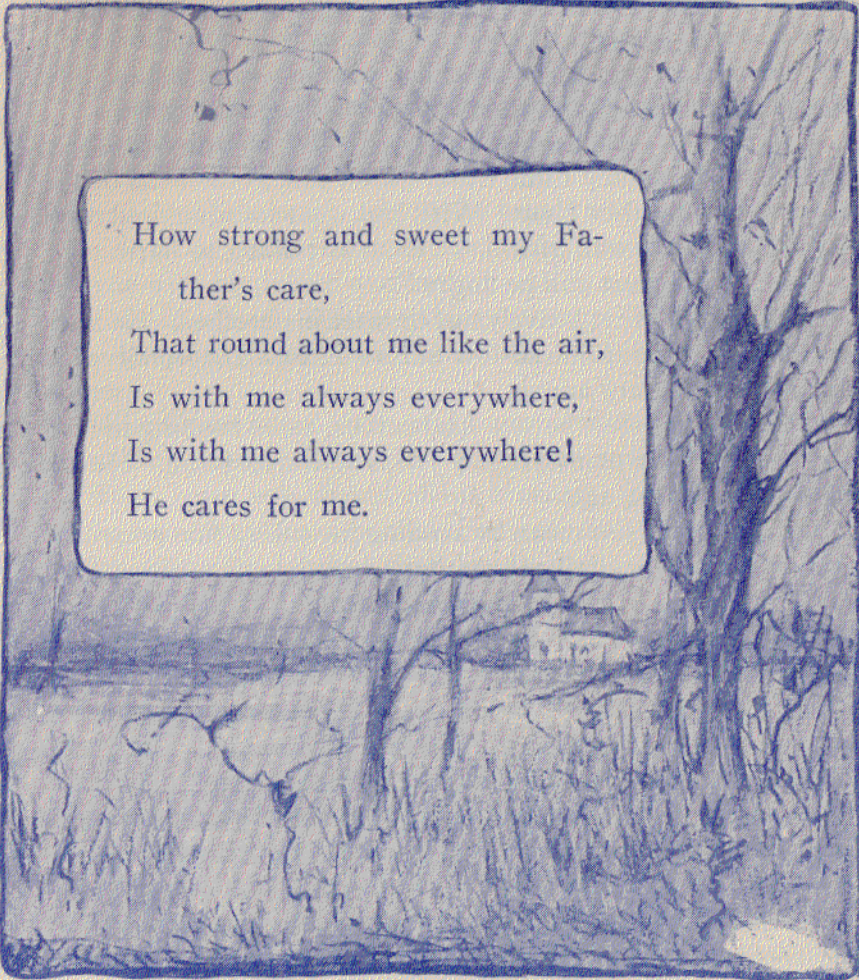

"You do not need to give me a present," said Esau. "I have enough. I want you to keep what you have."

But Jacob begged Esau to keep his present. "If you do I will know you are not angry with me any longer," said Jacob.

Esau said he would go back with Jacob. "No," said Jacob. "I cannot travel with my sheep and cattle as fast as you and your four hundred men. Go ahead and we will follow more slowly."

Esau offered to leave some of his men to help Jacob. Then the two brothers parted the best of friends. They were both happy because their quarrel was ended.

Be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving each other.
—Eph. 4:32.

How strong and sweet my Father's care,
That round about me like the air,
Is with me always everywhere,
Is with me always everywhere!
He cares for me.
